SafeWork NSW’s At risk workers’ strategy 2018–2022 supports and protects the four identified key groups of workers that are deemed to be most at risk of harm in the workplace:

- Culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) workers
- Migrant workers
- Young workers (up to 25 years old)
- Workers employed through labour hire arrangements.

These worker groups are typically found in sectors such as construction, agriculture, manufacturing, accommodation and food services, retail, government, and health care and social assistance.

IDENTIFYING PRIORITY ISSUES – HOW WE KNOW THIS

We talked to over 550 individuals and organisations

We researched data and trends

We visited you on site as you worked

During 2017, we worked with key community groups, industry representatives and stakeholders to develop the strategy including workers, business operators, the Australian Border Force, Multicultural NSW, the Fair Work Ombudsman, the Office of the Small Business Commissioner, Youthsafe, non-government organisations, unions, educational institutions and Fair Trading NSW.

Forums have also been held with experts, industry representatives, community groups and advocates for these four at risk groups.

Consultation will continue with stakeholders in the future.

Qualitative national and international data was also sourced to inform the development of priorities and initiatives.

CALD workers

People who have different linguistic, religious and ancestral backgrounds.

Migrant workers

People who have moved to Australia to take up work, or study or holiday, with legal authorisation to work. These workers don't have permanent resident status in Australia.

Labour hire workers

People employed by a labour hire company and then undertake specific duties for another company (the host) for a defined period of time.

Young workers

Approximately 17 per cent of NSW workers are aged up to 25 years old. Of these, 13233 claimed a temporary disability and 3 a permanent disability in 2015-16, and 6 were fatally injured in 2017.

Although there are data limitations due to underreporting, research and close engagement with key stakeholders, workers and community groups has enabled greater insight and focus across these four worker groups.
PRIORITISED RISK FACTORS

The data obtained, research and the insights gained from consultation and forums, has enabled us to identify the risk factors for each of the four at risk worker groups and the baseline to track progress.

We will address these risk factors on a prioritised basis through to 2022, with an annual review of all issues in consultation with stakeholders. SafeWork NSW will also review future reporting and system requirements for incidents involving at risk workers.

The added complexity is that there can be multiple risk factors to consider for a worker if they are from one or more of the at risk groups.
